Students to be schooled on physical literacy

Ex-NHLer Jim Thomson will deliver message on developing key 'life skills'

WHAT:

AURORA (April 27, 2018): On May 7, Aurora Tigers owner Jim Thomson will be appearing at Our Lady of Grace C.E.S. to deliver the message that “physical literacy matters.”

Grades 4-8 students will be hearing from this ex-NHLer not about sport specialization – like hockey drills – but about the importance of developing key life skills such as running, jumping, throwing, catching, and swimming. These are essential to numerous sport and play activities, not to mention their payoff in fitness, fun, and friendships.

Thomson will also discuss the connections between physical activity and mood, and physical literacy – learning movement skills and patterns – and brain development.

Our Lady of Grace C.E.S., an Activate Aurora school, will be the final school this season host the event, which will be enlivened with Thomson’s personal stories. Each student will also receive a signed photo, and an “I met a pro hockey player” sticker as they leave the presentation.

WHO:

Aurora Tigers owner (and Ex-NHLer) Jim Thomson, with representatives from Activate Aurora and Sport Aurora.

WHERE:

Our Lady of Grace, C.E.S., 120 Aurora Heights Dr., Aurora

WHEN:

Monday, May 7, 2:00 p.m.

Did you know:

Research has shown that being active later in life depends on feeling confident in an activity setting. This usually comes from having learned fundamental movement and sport skills, or physical literacy, as a child.
